Tashir recognised by Forbes as the largest private Russian development company

Tashir Group has been ranked among the 200 largest private Russian companies in 2014, according to Forbes (Issue No. 127, October 2014). Tashir, with a gross revenue amounting to 105.3 billion for 2013, was ranked 3 positions higher than the previous year, and took the 55th position overall, demonstrating the highest ranking among Russian commercial real estate developers. The first ranking of the largest private companies in Russia was published in 2013; the Tashir Group was placed 58th with revenue amounting to 90.2 billion roubles.

The Forbes ranking represents both public and private companies in various industries that have less than 50% of their capital owned by the state or by foreign investors, as well as listed companies. The ranking was conducted according to revenue generated in 2013. According to the magazine, the total revenue of the 200 companies included in the ranking has remained at about the same level of 23.9 trillion roubles - that is 1 trillion more than in 2012. The list of the ranking participants has remained fairly constant this year. The full version of the ranking can be found here: www.forbes.ru
